Using the powerful AI-powered feature called Adobe Sensei, Photoshop detects and removes noise, corrects red-eye, sharpens and smooths. In addition to the various editing tools, Adobe Sensei technology also produces outstanding photos by retouching and even removing freckles and other blemishes. It works by blindly analyzing the image and determining what the changes need to be from a human layer, which means Photoshop turns into a retouching assistant. Adobe Creative Cloud finds its business model in subscription-based service which is returning revenue to its customers. Adobe products are used by millions of creative professionals worldwide, and Creative Cloud provides a suite of efficient, easy-to-use solutions that include desktop and mobile apps, enterprise content management services and goff-to-field device tools. Adobe Creative Cloud has changed the way people work and creates content, making a huge difference in the way people collaborate and exchange information. With its powerful tools and efficient services, Creative Cloud provides a tremendous value to its designers, non-designers and design studios. It also helps its customers to be more productive, more effective and more efficient front-to-back, making it an ideal solution for both design studios and busy individuals. Filmmakers increasingly are reliant on creative technology to leverage digital content to create powerful VFX using complex toolsets. Extremely high fidelity toolsets enable filmmakers to create more realistic digital characters. For example, photorealistic look-alikes for actors can be encountered every day through movie posters and virtual sets on movie sets.

Adobe also introduced several new tools in Photoshop to help photographers make stylized images that are easier to manipulate. For example, the Darken Color and Lighten Color tools allow you to adjust contrast richly and easily in your photo. These new features are all released as part of today's announcements at Adobes MAX in Los Angeles, which included a record number of educational sessions and announcement of a new Core-D curriculum from college instructors including a graduate course of studies. As a part of Adobe MAX this year, MaxMind will present the Global Top Lookups report at the company's headquarters in Orem, Utah, counting more than 34 million IP addresses. Attendees will learn how Adobe technology has become a critical component of MaxMind's growth, including specifically how our HTML5 Geolocation technologies are used by companies ranging from places like Rometrics and Haris to ICAL , a company that everyone needs to know. "Every day, thousands of new apps and websites harness our Geolocation technologies and we're excited to partner with MaxMind to show how many of them are already using MaxMind location data to help organizations target their users, gain customer insights and improve their online marketing," said Omri Bar-Zeev, CEO, MaxMind. "Adobe continues to fuel progressive innovation in the digital space, making Photoshop as sophisticated as ever before. Now, we're taking on the challenge to make the way that users collaborate on projects even more powerful and simpler," said Casey Newton, senior vice president and general manager, Adobe Photoshop. "We've let the next generation of creators take charge of the way they work by empowering them with a range of new tools that make it easier than ever to collaborate and share ideas."
