Adobe Creative Cloud customers can use Share For Review (beta) to collaborate in real time on projects, even when not in Photoshop. To start planning for a project, Adobe Creative Cloud customers simply visit the saved project or canvas on the web and click Share For Review. Once an image is open in the browser, collaborators can add or remove editing marks and annotations as needed; collaborate directly from the browser with a new annotation and all annotation history remains in tact; and remap content in the image with new collaboration tools. The image and an annotation can be shared with collaborators using any supported web browser, which can all edit the image from the web in tandem. Adobe Creative Cloud customers can also use Share For Review with mobile apps, and there are new features available in the full version of Mobile and Touch app. These collaborative improvements include commenting and marking on images in real time, editing directly from the browser, and making annotations directly on iOS and Android devices. Mobile device users can even see Adobe Sensei suggestions as they view and annotate in the browser. Adobe Creative Suite 6 customers will see a number of enhancements for image-editing projects, including new features that help them work faster. Photos can now be automatically saved for the current project when exporting in the new optimized Packed PSD format. Additionally, radiance-based metadata is now saved for editing in Photoshop. Users enjoy the additional speed of a new ENHANCE tool set that augments the original context-aware adjustments with new features. Image-editing algorithms that help users explore and correct the image's structure are also speeding up routine image corrections.
