Lightroom 5 comes with the Adobe IPTC Mobile Tag Editor. It has more than 20 options for IPTC tags, including ImageCAPTUREDATE, KEYWORDS and TAGKEYVALUE. It also supports a tag to GIF animation, which is great for making GIF image galleries. I wish the files could be uploaded to a database on a server, but other than that, this is a great tool that can also be used in other applications, such as Windows Live Photo Gallery. Developers of other software applications might find this tool useful and expand it in future releases. Coming from Lightroom 3.x, I think it has been well received by reviewers I've spoken to. One of the reasons I love Lightroom is the way it presents images. It provides a wide range of tools for precisely defining the range of color and lighting in an image. Photography is inherently a visual experience and presenting it with a known range of colors is all about reading that image. Lightroom does a solid job of giving the viewer the tools to closely study the colors and light associated with a picture. Lightroom 5 takes that experience to a whole new level. If you might have skipped the past two or three versions of Lightroom, the new version is the first one to allow you to preview your images in a streaming viewer. You can view your images and rate them online without leaving the program. In the past, you had to export your images to a folder and open that folder in your web browser to view them. Lightroom 5 allows you to preview images and weigh in on them without leaving the program.
