Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method for treating pulmonary diseases or disorders, and in particular to a method of treating such diseases or disorders in animals, particularly mammals, by administering to the animal a therapeutically effective amount of a lipophilic chalcone derivative. The lipophilic chalcone derivative used in the present invention can be selected from a number of chalcone derivatives. 2. Description of the Related Art The pulmonary system, in most mammals, comprises two main structures: the bronchi and the lungs. The bronchi, or bronchial tubes, branch off from the trachea. They carry air into the two lungs, also known as the pulmonary lobes. The lungs, or pulmonary lobes, are the air-carrying part of the pulmonary system. They are the site of air-blood gas exchange and have a layer of specialized cells called pneumocytes. The two lungs are connected by the pulmonary trunk. It is known that many pulmonary diseases or disorders are the result of malfunction of the parenchyma, the tissue of the lung, or a certain cells within the parenchyma. This malfunction may be due, for example, to a genetic disposition, an immunological factor, or to some form of injurious agent
