For an ISO and a closeup, I wish to pick the ISO that gives the highest camera resolution for the digital print size. For example, a picture taken with a 40 mm lens would have a digital print size of 10 x 7". Here, I wish to calculate the ISO that would give me a maximum of 6000 pixels. Is this a good way to go about this?
 A: There is no "good" way to do this because it depends on the particular photo. A picture taken with a fast shutter speed (like 1/200) may have details that a photo taken at slower shutter speed (like 1/100) will miss. On the other hand, when images are enlarged for printing, no matter how large the print size, the DPI will never increase. As a result, if you are doing this calculation, you might
