One of the most over-looked facts about pro wrestling is the physical prowess of its actors. Although much of the depth and intensity of the matches may be rooted in psychology and character, physical skill and perseverance are required to train, wrestle, and become a pro wrestler in this business. We're not talking about the occasional fighter who uses his natural ability to simply be thrown around, though. We're talking about things like jumping through 10 feet of rope with just the balls of your feet and your hands as your only landing point. Wrestling rings are extremely small. Wrestlers aren't allowed to be bigger or stronger than the guy that's wrestling them. They have to wear whatever gimmick they want, but they have to be able to do all of the things that are required of them physically to be a superstar in the WWE. It's hard enough for an average guy to even step into a wrestling ring without being overly conditioned, nevermind one who is also using their one arm to do it. The typical wrestler uses the untrained muscles in their bodies to compete, while many of these legends use their one arm and their excellent conditioning to compete. These guys are the very definition of natural athletes. Because of the incredible significance of the physical skill required, we've decided to provide these four one-armed stars with their own section on their favorites list.Alert P-22 The Alert P-22 is a 26-ton emergency response vehicle for the Government of Ontario, Canada. It replaced the older FC G-7 model. There are only fifteen of these vehicles in service. Its role is to move police, fire, ambulance and ministry of transportation facilities in
